NOTES AND REFERENCES.

PREFATORY REMARKS.—The First Standard-Phonographic Reader is designed for reading after the pupil has studied the Compendium from § 1 to § 255, in connection with the Reading and the Writing Exercises of the Hand-Book. The present Reader is the third of a series of phonographic text-books which will comprise the following works—I. The Synopsis of Standard Phonography, presenting the general principles of the art, as a useful preparation for acquiring a minute and thorough knowledge of the art, by the study of—II. The Hand-Book of Standard or American Phonography, presenting in a scientific form the general principles of Phonography and classifying its particulars. III. The First Standard-Phonographic Reader, comprising many of the best selections of English literature, beautifully engraved in the Corresponding Style, and illustrated by Mr. Chauncey B. Thorne and accompanied by notes and references. IV. The Second Standard-Phonographic Reader, to be engraved, in the Reporting Style, by Mr. Thorne, and accompanied by a Key, and by Notes and References. V. The Standard-Phonographic Dictionary, which will present the particulars of Standard Phonography, and be an invaluable work for the writer of either the Corresponding or the Reporting Style. These works, it is thought, will furnish every desirable facility for the acquisition of a thoroughly practical knowledge of the useful, entertaining, and refining art of Phonetic Shorthand in its best form. They will also lay a solid foundation for a Phonographic Literature which will be produced in the very best style, in respect of artistic execution; and which, in respect of intellectual and moral character, will attract, inform, and improve the mind.

In the following notes and references, please observe—

1. That the references, unless otherwise specified, are to the Compendium, Part II. of the Hand-Book.

2. That the references are to the sections and their subdivisions, unless preceded by p.=page. Two or more references are separated by a semicolon; thus, 48; 150.

If the student would make sure and rapid progress, let him make every indicated reference to the principles of the Hand-Book, though the same reference may have been made a hundred times previously.

This frequent referring will impress the principles indelibly upon the memory.

When the Reader is read in class, the teacher should examine the pupils as to the principles involved in the exercise, somewhat as a grammar-class would be examined in syntactical principles.

It is very desirable and useful, with a view to becoming a good phonographic penman, that portions of the Reader should be repeatedly copied by the student.
